Call for Tennessen Graduate Research Fellowship, Summer 2011

March 8, 2011

Deadline
4:30 pm, Monday, April 18, 2011

Background
The Center for 21st Century Studies (C21), a UW System Center of Excellence at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee campus, leads the way in imagining, defining, and creating the burgeoning field of 21st century studies, focusing on the intersection of the humanities, arts, and sciences (social and natural) with issues of compelling concern. In Spring 2005, C21 launched the Tennessen Graduate Research Fellowship, inviting applications from Ph.D. candidates with dissertator status at UWM.

Eligibility
Dissertators at UWM in one of C21’s traditional areas of emphasis (humanities, arts, architecture, and humanistic social sciences) who expect to defend their dissertation in the 2011-12 academic year. For more information, please contact C21 deputy director Kate Kramer (kkramer@uwm.edu).

Protocol
Submit the following to c21@uwm.edu:
1. an application cover sheet (available www.C21.uwm.edu)
2. a three- to four page statement (maximum 1000 words) describing your dissertation
3. a curriculum vitae
4. an advisor assessment form, completed by the dissertation advisor (available at www.C21.uwm.edu)
5. a writing sample (for example, a recent conference paper or a chapter of the dissertation), not to exceed thirty pages in length

Terms of the Fellowship
The Tennessen Graduate Research Fellow is a dissertator who will spend two to three months at the Center (June, July, August) and may spend one month away from the Center for research purposes. The Tennessen Fellow receives a stipend including standard benefits and tuition remission, has an office and computer at the Center during the fellowship period, and also has access to Center resources to support his/her research. The Tennessen Fellow will have the opportunity to present his/her research during the academic year following the fellowship.
