Branch and Depot Listings

By the early 1870s, the Val. Blatz Brewing Company was already shipping beer throughout the country from their home office in Milwaukee. Each shipping location had agents who distributed beer to nearby areas.

Smaller distribution points or Depots were similar to storefronts, which sold only Blatz beer to individual customers as well as to local businesses. Depots actually referred to two different relationships between the "storefront" and the Milwaukee home office. In one type of depot, the home office hired managers from local areas to act as agents for the Valentin Blatz Brewing Company. These depot agents were not responsible for any recordkeeping; the Milwaukee home office kept all accounting records. In another type of depot, local agents bought wholesale from Blatz and sold on their own account. They received large discounts, but were more like franchises of today in that they were autonomous from Milwaukee interests and kept their own records.

When a city supported greater moneymaking opportunities, the Milwaukee home office created Branches. Like the depots, branches had a "storefront" area where individual customers and local businesses could buy beer. Branches were more than distribution points. They also consisted of offices, warehouses, and a manager and staff paid by the home office. Each branch prepared complete accounting records on their premises and then forwarded them to Milwaukee.

Records from the collection were used to compile the tables that follow. This may not be a complete record of all the branches and depots that were in existence from 1862 through 1944. Most of these cities already had a depot or branch in place by 1890. Cities with both branch and depot listings refer to a distribution point that changed size, or to a city that had more than one distribution point. Bolded entries refer to cities that have at least one volume in the Blatz collection.
