1. Course Overview

This course explores feminist methodologies with a focus on feminist theory and qualitative research methods. As a class, we will explore what feminist research is along with how it differs from other forms of research is.

In connection with these questions, we will also explore the subjective nature of knowledge production. We will engage with concepts such as research ethics, feminist praxis, objectivity, positionality, and reflexivity. All of which will be driven by the questions: what is knowable, and how to we come to know what we know?

2. Course Materials

I do not assign a text book in the course. Weekly readings will be comprised of academic articles and book chapters. Book chapter reading will primarily draw from two sources:
