MEMORIAL RESOLUTION

Professor Felicity Brogden-Ollswang (1948-1979)

With great sadness, the faculty, staff and students of the School of Architecture and Urban Planning learned of Felicity Brogden-Ollswang's death on March 18, 1979.

An Assistant Professor of Architecture at UW-Milwaukee since September, 1977, Felicity was born on June 22, 1948 in London, England. She earned a B.A. in Geography and Sociology with Joint Honors at the University of Hull, England; a M.A. in Urban and Regional Planning at the University of Nottingham; and a Ph.D. in Urban and Regional Planning at UW-Madison.

Felicity served selflessly her colleagues, her students and the professional community. Her professional dedication, her motivation, her high standards and the high expectations she had for herself and others are irreplaceable qualities, ones which had begun to have a significant impact on the Department and the School.

Her intellectual abilities led her to pursue a wide array of interests simultaneously. She could think big and small. She brought to her work a humanitarian quality, a concern for the quality of life, a sense of the potential of people. She was a planner in the humanitarian tradition, believing in people more than paper. Felicity's interest in neighborhood preservation was a demonstration of her respect and love for the past and her faith in the future. Her English heritage gave her a sense of the joy which both the city and the countryside could offer.

Felicity asked that a stanza from The Soldier by Victorian poet Rupert Brooke be read in remembering her.

"If I should die think only this of me:
that there's some corner of a foreign field that is forever England."
