Recommendation of the Academic Policy Committee to abolish the rule "Conflicts: When a departmental examination conflicts with another examination, it is the responsibility of the department giving the combined-section examination to take care of the conflicts."

RATIONALE: When this rule was put into effect in 1961, there were fewer large multi-section courses than there are today, and there were fewer courses so that exam conflicts were less likely. Abolishing this rule will require students to make individual arrangements with instructors, as is done currently in all other instances.
