The Academic Policy Committee recommends that the Faculty Senate adopt the following policy as part of all future academic calendars (1989-90 and beyond):

There will be a one day study period after the last day of classes and before the start of final exams.*

Rationale:

At the present time many students are faced with final exams on the day after classes end. This offers little time to review and assimilate course material. In the past a study period was a positive integral part of the learning experience. This period might make the difference for weaker students, and certainly would allow all students a more thorough review of their courses.
