The principal accomplishment of the Extension Policy Committee during 1988-89 was to achieve administrative review and suggest changes in the registration form for outreach courses. Credit outreach students generally have three characteristics: a) they are nontraditional in that they are part-time, older students with limited access to regular campus credit courses; b) their participation is nonrecurring or irregular; and c) they are special students. In spite of this the old registration form asked unnecessary and potentially embarrassing questions: "On whose income tax form are you currently listed as a dependent?" "Where and when did you last register to vote?" "List in chronological order any education beyond high school, including any college, university, vocational-technical school, extension, or service schools ..." The new registration form simply asks the students to indicate the reason(s) they qualify for resident tuition and whether or not they hold a bachelor's degree.

The Committee also kept informed on the Report to the Regents on the Integration of the Extension Function and the Vice Chancellors' Working Group on the Integration of the Extension Function. Members are especially interested in descriptions of "collaborative appointments" (whether voluntary or mandatory); the definitions of category 1 vs. category 2 programs, and the students characteristics and data to be gathered for the two categories. (Several of these matters have also been discussed by the University Committee and the DOCE Executive Committee).
