Although making a late start, the Committee has held three meetings during which it heard reports on existing programs and considered possible new programs leading to a master's degree.

The University of Wisconsin—Milwaukee has inherited from its two predecessor institutions full programs leading to master's degrees in commerce, education, engineering, and social work and partial programs in mathematics and other letters and science subjects.

The Committee has been exploring the possibility of further participation of letters and science departments, especially by means of joint programs with the School of Education. The Committee is, however, handicapped in that the University of Wisconsin—Milwaukee Faculty has apparently no direct jurisdiction over the graduate work in the Milwaukee area.

The Committee does not at present recommend any change in the Faculty regulations concerning the organization or duties of this Committee.
