During the 1963-64 school year, the UWM Summer Session Committee met as a whole five times, and representatives of the committee met separately with associate deans of UWM and most of the heads of the Departments of Letters & Science on several occasions. Major considerations that have concerned the committee have been the following:

1. Analysis of the 1963 Summer Session Enrollment Report and Evening Students' Questionnaire.

2. Discussion and action for increasing summer session budgets, particularly in order to enable departments in all schools and divisions of the University to offer special summer programs (apart from their regular offerings) as separate or joint undertakings.

3. Discussion of ways to improve scheduling of special programs to enable maximum benefit to the University, students, and the community.

4. Evaluation of summer school program loads, tutorial courses, most effective scheduling, registration procedures, and advantages and disadvantages of increases in the number of evening classes.

5. Examination of possibility of coordinating UWM summer school session hours with those of Marquette University.

6. Discussions relating to reviewing the effectiveness of the summer school bulletin schedules with the timing of graduate school research support announcements.

7. Exploration of ways of augmenting funds for special programs by drawing on community resources and foundation support.

8. Discussion of re-instituting the Summer Post and other methods of increasing publicity for both regular and special programs.

9. Study and comparison of summer school programs in other Wisconsin institutions of higher learning.

For all of the above concerns, proposals were made to Dr. Dowling as Director of the Summer School, to be carried out insofar as possible.

Juris Veidemanis served as chairman and James R. Schaefer as secretary.
