The Summer Sessions Committee met on October 5, 1967, in the office of the Director of Summer Sessions. Present were J. Baxter (chairman), C. Golightly (ex-officio member), J. Friebert, D. Layde, D. Miniaci, H. Schroedter and E. Wheeler. Dr. Golightly, Director of Summer Sessions, discussed the problem of discrepancies between summer courses and academic year courses as far as actual class time is concerned (for example, a student who takes a three-credit course during the summer spends approximately 400 minutes less time in class than he would if he took the same course during the academic year). The committee took no action, but discussed the following alternative solutions: (1) Lengthening the summer class period from 50 to 60 minutes, (2) Lengthening the summer session from eight to nine weeks.
